II. READING (2.5 points)

TASK 1 Read the passage. Circle the best answer A, B or C to each of the questions.

When it comes to preparations for studying abroad, the very first challenge for students is how to live independently.

Stepping out of their comfort zone to live and study in a faraway country often ingrains an obscure fear of loneliness and helplessness. Therefore, if you have a plan to earn a degree in a foreign country, you need to equip yourselves with essential skills to start a truly independent life as soon as possible. First and foremost, you do not need to be an excellent cook but should know basic cooking skills to feed yourselves. Suppose that you experienced a pandemic period, you would have to cook at home due to social distancing and most restaurant closures. Second, clean-up and household skills are of equal importance. To lower accommodation costs, many students often choose to share apartments with other mates. Definitely, no one wants to stay with those who are untidy and do not know how to do simple household tasks, so make sure that you can do daily housework well enough. Third, money management is a challenging task for most overseas students. Some students are often flat broke at the end of the month because they cannot handle their budget. It's advisable to be a smart shopper by making a suitable shopping list and keeping an accurate record of your daily expenses to avoid pointless debt. In short, the pieces of advice will hopefully make your independent life easier when you go to university in another country.

1. What is the passage mainly about?

5. Which of the following is true about the passage?
- A. Students must be excellent cooks when living abroad.

 - C. Students don't need to pay attention to what they buy every day.

Script:

Ava: What are you doing, Matt?

Matt: Hi, Ava. Having planned a summer holiday in Hawaii, I'm learning a few basic Hawaiian phrases.

Ava: I don't think this is the ideal time to visit Hawaii.

Matt: Why not?

Ava: Having suffered from over-tourism, the locals are asking tourists to stop visiting the island. Thousands of new arrivals every day are creating traffic jams, overcrowding and resource depletion; and the local people have to cope with their consequences every day.

Matt: Actually, I have heard of the problem but I try to be responsible whenever I travel. I'm aware of the impact on the environment and the local community. Therefore, I usually shop locally to help the community's economy. When possible, I always book eco-tours.

Ava: Not every tourist shares your sense of responsibility. Some use natural heritage sites as a backdrop for their pictures and display disrespectful behaviour towards other countries' cultural heritage. In some cases, tourists even destroyed natural and cultural landmarks.

Matt: Some tourists can misbehave; however, I think tourism, in general, can be beneficial. It was the financial gain from tourism that contributed to many projects that preserved and protected heritage values. Having received more job opportunities, local people also benefit from the popularity of tourism.

TASK 2

1. National Park
2. the late 1800s

3. last wolf
4. restore the balance
5. were released

Script:

A natural ecosystem is a community of living and non-living beings that exist in the same environment. These beings have a close relationship in which the removal of one species can greatly impact the whole ecosystem. One example of this is the disappearance of wolves in Yellowstone National Park in the mid-1900s.

When the park was established in 1872, the wolf population in the area already decreased. Due to a lack of protection from park managers and the government's predator control programme, a large number of wolves were killed in the late 1800s and early 1900s, which led to the eradication of the last wolf in 1926.

Having eliminated an entire species from the ecosystem, park managers realised their big mistake. It was wolves that kept the population of deer under control. Because of the absence of their main predator, deer multiplied and the overpopulation destroyed plants and other species habitats.

Following the deteriorating condition of the park, many scientists and biologists suggested bringing back wolves to restore the balance of the park's ecosystem. Campaigns for the reintroduction of wolves began in the mid-1900s, but it wasn't until 1995 that fourteen wolves were released into the park. That was a big success bringing about greater biodiversity and a more balanced ecosystem.

These days, it is argued that the promotion of tourism at national reserves is a menace to wildlife protection. From my point of view, if we take advantage of tourism properly, it will substantially contribute to the preservation of rare flora and fauna.

Firstly, it's a good way to raise tourists' awareness of wildlife issues. Through eco-tours, they have a great chance to enjoy the pristine beauty with a diversity of exotic plants and animals. The more concerned about vulnerable ecosystems they get, the more actions they take to prevent poaching and deforestation.

Secondly, the expenditure on maintaining national parks from local governments is limited; therefore, the revenue generated from tourism activities is a valuable supplement to the conservation operations.

Finally, nowadays many eco-tours are designed for field trips. Observing the multitude of plants and animals in person will widen young students' practical knowledge of biodiversity. They can do some fascinating research on how to protect threatened species after these trips.

In summary, I firmly believe that tourism at national reserves should be promoted due to its great indicated benefits above. However, we should take control of it precisely to avoid man-made destruction there.

Peer pressure, the strong influence from members of the same age group or social group on others' psychology, thoughts and behaviour, has remained widespread among teenagers in recent years. If teenagers are unable to tackle it, they will wilt under the pressure of low self-esteem and depression. In the digital age, young students are overwhelmed with tremendous online articles about admirable achievements of 'someone else's child' or 'a prodigy next door'. Consequently, reality is replete with teens who seem reserved and like to hide in their own room for fear of being asked about exam results or tolerating unfavourable comparisons from their relatives and acquaintances. In addition, many teens nowadays tend to make friends with those who study well or have good looks, so many young students have to change who they are so as to fit in with their peers. In other words, weak-minded and average individuals become worn out in an attempt to get flying colours, look slim and fit as well as possess cool tech gadgets. To handle negative peer pressure, students need to alter their opinions, care for their own feelings more than others' thoughts and trusting in their own abilities. Accepting one's imperfections is another way to stop pushing themselves beyond the limits of their mental endurance. Besides, if teenagers' parents are one of the factors that make them stressed about peer pressure, they should spend more time talking frankly with them to get sympathy and mutual understanding.

 - A. Children become rebellious and talk back to their parents.
 - B. Children hang out with their bad friends more often.
 - C. Children prefer being alone and rarely go out of their rooms.
 - D. Children flinch from keeping up with their ideal friends.
4. Why do many young students try to fit in with their peers?

- A. They want to be good at sports and have a nice appearance.
 - B. They fear being bullied in a group of friends.
 - C. They don't want to be weak-minded in their friends' eyes.
 - D. They can make friends with other peers more easily.
5. Which of the following is NOT true about the passage?
- A. Many average students become exhausted when trying hard to be left behind by their friends in class.

Mental health is one of the most pressing issues that teenagers have to deal with nowadays. According to a recently-conducted survey, one in five teenagers experiences some forms of mental disorder. However, there is a lack of knowledge about mental health around people suffering from these issues.

The most common problems that teenagers struggle with are depression, anxiety and eating disorders. The symptoms of these conditions such as sadness, concentration problems that parents and adults hardly notice. Moreover, it's easy to mistake these symptoms as a part of teenagers' growth. Mental health issues can affect young people's physical health, personal relationship and academic performance.

Besides the ignorance of mental health, people with mental disorders also have to face prejudices and negative attitudes from society. Many people incorrectly assume that mentally ill people are crazy and violent, which keeps young people from seeking help.

For people with mental conditions, recovery can be harder without timely treatment. Therefore, young people shouldn't hide their struggles and feelings. It's important to get diagnosed by professionals. It may take some time to find the right combination of therapy and medication for each person, but recovering from mental health issues is possible.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I would like to have more information about your vocational course on web designing that I saw in your advertisement last week.

First I would appreciate it if you could tell me whether I need to take a test before enrolling in your course. I have got certificate informatics Level B so I think I can manage some basic computer tasks.

Next, I would like to know about the time of the course as well as the tuition fees. Since I do some part-time jobs to make a living in the morning and afternoon on weekdays, are there any courses available in the evening or at the weekend? For the course fees, I wonder if there is any discount when I sign up in advance.

Finally, it would be great if you could explain more about the benefits of achieving your certificate, such as which company would accept it.

I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours sincerely,
